Good Morning Henry and Erik -

The Architect has responded to PACAC's letter as follows:

"We welcome the comments from the PACAC as we've put a lot of consideration into how the new building will fit in with the existing King George while establishing its own identity.

Some points to note:

- The brick and stone used in the new building will be a close match to the materials of the existing school
- The south block of the new school echoes the massing of the existing building
- The south block will have a stone band and an contemporary interpretation of the deep cornice on the existing building.
- The north block will have a more contemporary vocabulary, more in line with the museum and archives building.

I can include the points above in our response with the 2nd submission. The materials used are noted on the exterior elevations.

Please let me know if you will require anything further with regards to materials".
