Mount St. Joseph has historical value as the first convent motherhouse in Peterborough, and also the fourth motherhouse of the Sisters of St. Joseph to be established in Canada.

The first congregation of the Sisters of St. Joseph in the Peterborough area arrived in the 1890's with the task of administering St. Joseph's Hospital. Proper residential facilities were needed in Peterborough and the Sisters subsequently bought a farmhouse, Inglewood, and its ten-acre property in 1894 for the sum of $ 6,350.00. Originally the home of David G Halton, local police magistrate in the late 1860s, Inglewood was put up for sale by Halton, and was the home of the Sherwood family of Peterborough until 1893.

Mount St. Joseph has historical value through the activities of the Sisters of St. Joseph who lived and worked at the Mount while integrating themselves into the medical and educational communities of Peterborough. Of especial value is their work with St. Joseph's Hospital and the Peterborough Separate School Board.

The Sisters of St. Joseph administered the operation of the former St. Joseph's Hospital from 1890 to 1988. When St. Joseph's Hospital was established it was the only local area hospital willing to take Catholic patients. In 1906 the Sisters of St. Joseph opened a nursing school at St. Joseph's Hospital, which became one of the foremost nurse training schools in the area. The Sisters of St. Joseph have seen St. Joseph's Hospital through many times of crisis in the Peterborough community, including the Quaker Oats Fire of 1916 and the Spanish Influenza outbreak of 1918.

The Sisters of St. Joseph is also a teaching order, and the Sisters taught at many elementary and secondary schools in the separate school board until the late 1970s. They have also operated two schools, St. Mary's, a day and boarding school, and St. Cecilia's Music Centre. The Sisters of St. Joseph have continued to provide private academic and musical tutoring at Mount St. Joseph since 1970.

Mount St. Joseph is a good example of a combination of vernacular and ecclesiastical convent architecture in Peterborough. Since the Sisters of St. Joseph took possession of Inglewood and its surrounding property, the building has been renovated five times: in 1904, 1911, 1933, 1952 and 1967. The original Inglewood farmhouse that now makes up the core of Mount St. Joseph has been altered as ecclesiastical architectural elements have been introduced into the design. Highlights of the building include the 1911 addition of a corner domed tower. The rare Classical Revival porch added on to the northern wing and Inglewood core facades are essential to the heritage character of the building. The building also contains Gothic Revival stained glass windows in the chapel.

Mount St. Joseph has good contextual value in its prominent presence on the northern Monaghan Road landscape. The buildings occupy fifteen landscaped acres at the corner of McDonnell Street and Monaghan Road. The winding front driveway is lined with eighteen sugar and silver maple trees. The front lawn has a cedar privacy hedge that stretches from the driveway to the southern end of the property at Woodland Street.

Mount St. Joseph has been a private home, a Motherhouse, a teaching centre and a spiritual retreat during its lifetime. The building is physical evidence of the historical importance of the Sisters of St. Joseph to Peterborough. Mount St. Joseph is an interesting example of the combination of vernacular and ecclesiastical architecture, and the tree-lined grounds and winding driveway emphasize its prominence in the local landscape.
